Lions Club Will Endeavor To Foster A Salvage Campaign In Coleman

Will Try And Get Council And Other Organizations Behind Project And Then Call A Public Meeting, Magistrate J. W. Gresham Addressed Lions.

At the request of Councillor Dutil, who is also local Red Cross president, the Lions club at its meeting on Monday evening picked a committee of three, namely Dr. C. Rose, Fred Guerard and A. Balloch, to investigate the possibilities of sponsoring a salvage campaign in Coleman similar to the campaigns at present being conducted by cities, towns and villages from coast to coast. It is the intention of the Lions committee to approach the council and other local organizations for help in the campaign. Should this help be forthcoming a public meeting will be called for the purpose of telling the public just what is expected of them and how the bones, rags, papers, old iron, etc. will be gathered up and taken to a local depot.

Magistrate Gresham, who was present at the meeting, spoke in favor of the Lions taking the lead in such a worthy and patriotic cause and promised his support to the campaign. Councillor Aboussafy was also present and told how Edmonton gathered its salvage. Magistrate J. W. Gresham, of Blairmore, was guest speaker at the Lions meeting and chose as his subject "The Old and the New Armies." He spoke at length of his experiences in the army which he joined in 1894, his adventures in the Boer war in South Africa and also in the Great War No. 1. Army life in by-gone days was tough compared to what present day soldiers have to contend with. In the old days there were no doctors to attend over you as at present, only when a soldier was seriously ill was a doctor brought in. Neither were there any dentists present. Boots were sturdy but they always resulted in the wearer developing agonizing corns. Today the soldiers are nursed and petted and everything is provided for their personal comfort.

He had high praise for the Canadian soldiers. He stated the reason the Canadian soldiers were not taking part in the present conflict in the Balkans was because they have received special training with which to guard the island fortress.

Ten Candidates Confirmed At St. Alban's Church

On Sunday evening Bishop Sherman gave a most inspiring address to the 1941 Confirmation class, based on the crossing of the River Jordan by the Israelites under Joshua. He pointed out that through stepping on firmly planted rocks they had been enabled to safely pass over the river. As in those days what appeared to be impossible had been achieved, so today in these troublous times all difficulties would eventually be overcome if people would plant their feet firmly in the paths of righteousness.

On Sunday morning a class was confirmed at St. Luke's, Blairmore. The bishop was accompanied by his eldest son, coming by car from Calgary, and returning Sunday night.

Candidates confirmed were Mrs. Bert Collier, Mrs. Sam Ferno, Thelma Hart, Dorothy Clark, Mildred Griffiths, Beverly Short, Donald Graham, William Collier, Kenneth Short, Ernest Collier.

Bellevue United Church to Celebrate Victoria Day

Five Girls Now Actively Engaged in Winning May Queen Honors; Proceeds To Aid in Church Work

Bellevue United church, under the chairmanship of Rev. Wm. Irwin, will again sponsor the Victoria Day celebration in that town, May 24. The work was first started by Rev. Richard Upton to aid the church building fund and through the years it has grown to be one of the Pass gala days.

The program will follow along the same lines as in past years with the parade of cars and trucks decorated to symbolize various events. Sports for young and old will be held in the arena. An endeavor is being made to have West Canadian Collieries band in attendance.

The feature attraction will be the crowning of the May Queen. Five girls are now actively engaged in selling tickets in order to sell the greatest amount. Each ticket sold is worth so many votes. Those in the contest include Pauline Jalp, Winnifred Charlesworth, Audrey Prior, Helen Sosa and Nettie Lazarenko.

The proceeds will go towards the building extension fund.

Coleman High School Mixed Choir Wins Pattinson Cup At C.N.P. Festival

Air Force Band and Calgary Accordion Orchestra Among Outstanding Features of Festival; Conductor Jim Cousins Highly Pleased With Honors Won by Local Entries.

Crows Nest Pass musical festival came to a successful conclusion on Wednesday evening with honors being widely distributed throughout the Pass and southern Alberta points. Mrs. Elizabeth I. Morrison, of Saskatoon and a Canadian broadcasting official was adjudicator. During the last evening's performance President William Kerr announced that the festival had been a great success, both from the number of entries received and in attendance.

Features that highlighted the festival were the Air Force band from Macleod, the Calgary accordion band, string orchestra, the singing of Louis Olinek, of Hillcrest, Ernest Collier of Coleman, and the Crows Nest Boys' choir under W. G. Moffat. Many other entries brought forth favorable criticism from the adjudicator.

Among the Coleman winners, the majority of whom were trained in the schools by Mr. Jim Cousins, were:

Piano Duet, junior, under 12—Elaine Korman and Isobel Ewing. In winning first place these two children were highly praised by the adjudicator.

Vocal girls, under 17—Rose Popenluk 1, Doris Jackson 2. Vocal girls, under 10—Margaret McLellan, first. Margaret was praised for a striking voice which was much better than could normally be expected from a child of her age.

Piano Duet, under 16—Donald Graham and Clayton Rose. These two young men were told they made a very good team and won their competition in grand style.

Violin, grade 2, under 12—John Graham won second place.

Girls, high voice, under 17—Tillie Minunzie won first honors closely followed by Kathleen McLellan.

In the school chorus, intermediate class, Coleman placed second to Blairmore. In the high school chorus Coleman won first place.

Clayton Rose won second place in the piano, under 16 years. Miss Carmichael, of Blairmore, won this class.

In vocal, boys over 13 years, Louis Olinek, of Hillcrest, and Ernest Collier, of Coleman, stood out above the rest of the competitors. Olinek won out by one point, 89 against 88 received by Collier. Both boys were congratulated on their performances.

Coleman high school mixed choir won the George Pattinson cup for choral societies. Conductor Jim Cousins had high praise for this choir and is proud of its accomplishment.

St. Paul's United church won the Pincher Creek Cup for church senior persons. Dr. C. Rose conducted.

A. B. McMurdo, of Pincher Creek, easily won the baritone open class.

Mr. Cousins made special mention of Ernest Collier, Doris Jackson, Rosie Popenluk, Kathleen and Margaret McLellan among others for their excellent performances.

FESTIVAL CONCERT TO BE SPONSORED AT HIGH SCHOOL

Jim Cousins and his school musicians will sponsor a concert in the high school auditorium on Monday and Tuesday, May 5 and 6, in which all the pieces played and sung by individuals and choirs in the school will again be heard. Concert will start at 8 p.m. Many of the artists to be heard were highly praised by the adjudicators at the recently concluded C.N.P. musical festival.

C. A. T. S. Notes

The C.A.T.S. are proud to acknowledge the many compliments they received on the success of their second grand dance. Everyone had a very enjoyable time and have not been slow in mentioning it. The hall was beautifully decorated with blue and white streamers and strings of balloons. Unfortunately someone with a misplaced sense of humor began tearing down the decorations before the dance was well under way. The lunch, served at midnight by girls in uniform, was very much appreciated.

Commanding Officer Margaret Reid attended the affair where she met many of her friends from the Pass towns. We hope to have another such affair in the near future.

We have also to apologise to the many who kindly offered accommodations for Air Force members and who were disappointed. Last minute changes at Macleod prevented almost half the expected number from coming and hence many billets had to be turned down. We sincerely regret this happening as the response had been so whole-hearted, but we hope to be able to make up for it in the future.

After much negotiating, Mr. Kerr of the Motordrome has managed to purchase the General Motors V.A.D.C. course and from the looks of the first lesson it is not going to be a walkaway. May we express our appreciation of the interest and attention given us by both Mr. Kerr and his able assistant "Tex" Larmore.

Health With Wheat

As a stimulus to a more permanent agriculture, the federal government's wheat acreage policy may well prove to be a blessing in disguise and the time may come when those farmers, if there are any left, who are inclined to indulge in a bit of grubbing because conditions make it impossible to continue to pile up unsold wheat at a profit to themselves, will have good reason to change their viewpoint.

Apart from the unwisdom of calling upon the nation to divert large sums of money for the production of huge quantities of wheat which may not be required for some years, when it is so urgently and immediately needed for other phases of the war effort, the new policy of encouraging curtailment of wheat production should have the effect of laying the foundation for a stabilized agriculture which, in the future, will at least ensure a living for the farmer and his family and eliminate some of the evils and the risks attendant upon putting all the eggs in one basket.

The extent to which the farmer will willingly and cheerfully face the facts of the situation and co-operate with the government in this necessary move, to that degree will the time be hastened when Western Canadian agriculture will be a more reliable and dependable industry than it has been hitherto.

The federal government has announced that the amount of wheat that can be marketed this year will be limited to a total of 230,000,000 bushels. While the bonus to be paid for the excess acreage summer-fallow or seeded to coarse grains and grasses over and above the acreage sown to wheat in 1940 is based on acreage, the amount of wheat that can be accepted for the market is based on yield. So that even if the farmer cuts his wheat acreage to 65 per cent, of the area seeded to wheat last year he may still have an unsaleable surplus, if 1941 turns out to be a high yield season.

A Shared Responsibility

Thus, while the government has assumed the responsibility of encouraging reduction of acreage seeded to wheat, some responsibility for the ultimate result of this year's operations is left with the farmer and that is, of course, as it should be.

Given a good year it is quite possible that, even with wheat acreage cut to 65 per cent, of that of 1940, the season may produce more wheat than can be marketed and, in that event, with all elevator storage space occupied, the farmer may have to face the problem of storing such surplus.

As the war progresses and until hostilities cease with an Allied victory this problem of wheat surpluses may become even more acute than it appears to be now, since overseas markets, what little is left of them, may suffer even further contraction before they again open up. This presages the necessity for exploring the possibility of converting wheat to other uses or of encouraging greater consumption of wheat, domestically or in the contracted export market.

It is encouraging to find that some effort is being made in the latter direction with the recent announcement of Dr. F. F. Tisdall of Toronto, nutrition adviser to the federal department of national defence who told a Winnipeg audience that a new type of white flour which retains about 75 per cent, of necessary vitamins has been perfected by Dominion government researchers. This compares with the retention of only 15 per cent, of the vitamins under existing processes.

Dr. Tisdall announced this very important announcement with the declaration that: "If Canadians used the new type flour in place of the old, they would receive for nothing, at drug store prices, $34,000,000 of Vitamin B1 and over $6,000,000 of other B vitamins in the course of one year."

Even more important and even startling was his purported further statement in the same address that "If the people of Great Britain and Canada were properly fed, instead of a food surplus there would be a food shortage," this statement insofar as Canada is concerned being based on his assertion that surveys by the department of pensions and national health showed that a considerable proportion of Canada's population was not receiving the proper food.

The Staff Of Life

For many generations bread has been referred to as the "staff of life." There was probably a great deal more truth in the statement in the generation in which it was coined, when flour was coarse ground in small country mills than to-day, for it is common knowledge that with the development of a highly mechanized flour industry, such as we have it to-day, the refined process has "ground out" much of the vitamin content and valuable mineral constituents, essential to health and well being, from the resultant commodity.

The perfection of this new process, it may well be hoped, will not only serve to promote greater health for the nation and for the people of Great Britain, but will help to some extent to partially solve the wheat surplus problem in this country.

It is not long ago that one of the health authorities on this continent stated that the addition of synthetic vitamins to the diet is not nearly as effective as vitamins taken in the natural form, and if this be true, health can be promoted not only more effectively but more cheaply by the retention of these life-giving ingredients as Nature presents them.

Food Safeguards

Establishments operating in Canada under the Meat and Canned Foods Act numbered 88 in 1940. Twenty-five were in Ontario, 21 in Quebec, 11 in Manitoba, 10 in British Columbia, eight in Alberta, five each in Prince Edward Island and Saskatchewan, and three in New Brunswick. There were none in Nova Scotia.

Believes In Fate

Winston Churchill Has Had Many Narrow Escapes From Death

That Winston Churchill has nine times the proverbial nine lives of a cat is the firm belief of Phyllis Moir whose book, "I Was Winston Churchill's Private Secretary," is off the press.

As proof of her assertion, Miss Moir recited these facts: "At the age of four, he fell off a donkey in Ireland and suffered concussion. At 17, he fell 30 feet off a bridge onto a stony-river-bed. When he was British observer with the Spanish army in Cuba, a bullet whizzed over his head just as he leaned over to swallow a mouthful.

At Omdurman, an injured right arm caused him to carry a Mauser pistol instead of a saber and thanks to the pistol, he shot his way to safety when cut off by a group of madmen's dashes. On the North-west frontier in India and in the Boer war he came unscathed through engagements in which most of those around him were killed."

"In the first World War, Churchill once left his dugout for a few minutes and came back to find it blown to pieces by a heavy shell," continued Miss Moir, who has been private secretary to a number of well-known persons, but who considers her services with Britain's premier as a "private secretaryship" so far as she is concerned. "He has been involved in countless plane crashes. In New York, at the age of 57, he was run over by a car, suffered several injuries and pulled through, his vigor unimpaired. It is not surprising that the prime minister has come to believe that fate has played a part in his many escapes. 'Life is a whole and luck is a whole and the two cannot be separated' is a favorite maxim in the Churchillian philosophy."

Churchill has many hobbies, Miss Moir writes. They range from painting to bricklaying and from cooking to having his blood pressure taken. He also likes picnics but they must be elaborate affairs with champagne. He smokes 15 cigars a day and his cigar, the author holds, has taken the place of Chamberlain's umbrella as the British national emblem.

A lip and a stutter were Churchill's handicaps from birth. Miss Moir found the lip pronounced when she took dictation from him, and when excited, Churchill stuttered. But on the public platform and before a microphone, there is no stutter and the lip is imperceptible. That he overcame such obstacles in his chosen career she holds is indeed a high tribute to his perseverance. "I never detected an ounce of sentimentality in the man," writes Miss Moir, "and that perhaps is what makes him one of the greatest war leaders of all time. . . as a war leader, Mr. Churchill has at last found his mission."

Tombs Uncovered In Holy Land Date From First Century A.D.

Word comes from Jerusalem that a necropolis dating from the First Century A.D. has been uncovered upon a hillside near a German-Jewish township named Nahariyah, north of Acre, town famed in the history of the Crusades.

Three groups of tombs have already been cleared. One group consists of a central hall surrounded by chambers that were found to contain several clay coffins in which were remains of adult and child burials. There were also bronze and glass household utensils, such as lamps, vases and dishes, and coins which apparently were funerary ornaments.

Other tombs apparently had been stripped of their furnishings at some remote date, but one chamber that has been cleared appears to have been prepared by a husband and wife as a family vault; portraits of the deceased are painted upon a wall with an accompanying Greek inscription now in process of translation.

May Try To Recover Pennies Tossed From Forth Bridge

It is supposed to bring luck to anyone crossing Scotland's famous Forth bridge to toss a penny into the river. The bridge—and the superstition—have been in operation 50 years, and an average of 500 people a day cross it.

Now the Government has been urged to send divers into the water to recover an estimated £40,000 (about $160,000).—Maclean's Magazine.

Japan Has Glass Boom

Home And Foreign Demand Said To Be Taxing Supply

Due to the discovery of a raw process for the extraction of silica sand and the substitution of lead oxide for potash in the making of glass, the manufacture of this product, according to the Tokyo papers, is rapidly become one of the stable products of the country, with glass instead of paper in windows, some houses even with facades of glass, and with a constantly augmenting export trade.

While architects and builders are feverishly at work taking advantage of the glass boom, the export trade has increased by leaps and bounds with some 80,000 cases of sheet glass going abroad in the closing month of 1940, according to one paper which adds:

"Especially is this situation manifest in exports to the countries in Central and South America, the South Sea Islands and British India."

"Prior to the outbreak of the second European war, sheet glass had been exported chiefly by Belgium, Germany (erstwhile Czechoslovakia) and Japan. Now that the first two countries are involved in the current war and are unable to export aggressively, makers in this country are suddenly inundated with countless number of inquiries and orders."

"Especially has this trend been conspicuous in recent months since the stock in the consuming countries is now practically depleted. Incidentally the unit price is also said to be rising at big strides."

Large Canadian Force Has Arrived Safely At A British Port

A British Port.—Thousands of Canadian fighting men, including the largest force of Canadian-trained Imperial fliers yet to reach the United Kingdom, have just disembarked in this busy wartime port, eager to align themselves with other Imperial forces in the Empire's struggle against the Axis powers.

The arrivals included large groups of airmen, soldiers and reinforcements for the Royal Canadian Navy. Word of their landing was not disclosed until the men had dispersed to their camps all over Britain.

The air force draft under command of Flt.-Lt. Rod MacInnes, of Ottawa, was the largest group of Commonwealth Air Training plan graduates ever to land in England, considerably larger than the contingent which arrived two months ago.

The cheering youngsters, as most of them are—landed from great transports after an uneventful crossing and crowded into long trains lined up outside the station for fast trips to their camps.

Canadians, New Zealanders and Britons, all trained in Canada, arrived in their air force blue uniforms which contrasted sharply with the considerable number of Australian fliers in their dark blue uniforms.

Other airmen included Americans who volunteered for the air transport auxiliary.

No enemy U-boats or hostile aircraft were sighted during the long crossing in a convoy heavily guarded by warships.

LAC. Ernie Fairwell, of Saskatoon, who is going to an R.C.A.F. fighter squadron, said: "The luckiest break we ever had was to get with our fighter group for now we'll help keep Hurricanes fit for dogfights. It'll be a pleasure to see those guns are okay."

Sapper Doug, Munns of Saskatoon said: "We had some rough weather on the voyage but no other excitement, and I hope to see some soon."

The arrivals were greeted officially by Admiral Eustace Bromley and Geoffrey Shakespeare, Dominions under-secretary.

British Sea Blockade Making Itself Felt On Nazi War Effort

London.—Britain's blockade is slowly but surely reducing Germany's war effort.

Data made available by the ministry of economic warfare shows that while the highly organized economy of the Nazis is not subjected to any one overwhelming strain by lack of any particular commodity it is stretched at many points by the blockade. The effects are both direct and indirect.

The need to maintain synthetic and substitute industries, or simply to grow food instead of importing it, is a strain on labor and transport. The need to supply German soldiers in occupied countries and to keep Italy's industries going is a further strain.

Thus, the organization of supplies from and through Russia, and the provision of raw materials, make it increasingly necessary to keep the occupied countries going for Germany's profit.

Here are some instances of shortages:

Oil—Little evidence of immediate shortage except cessation of private motoring, but the supply position is obviously difficult. The aftermath of the Balkans campaign may make transport through Yugoslavia and even up the Danube difficult for some time.

Rubber—Buna (synthetic rubber) production in 1940 was only one-

Flight-Lieutenant Arnold of Kindersley Receives Medal

London.—Flight-Lieutenant Keith Fergus Arnold, of Kindersley, Sask., has been awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross in "recognition of gallantry and devotion to duty in execution of air operations." It was announced.

Flt.-Lt. Arnold's name appeared on the citation with several other British airmen who were awarded the D.F.C. and the Distinguished Flying Medal.

Arnold, born in 1911, was a trumpeter with the Canadian Light Horse before he was commissioned in the Royal Air Force in 1936.

Body Blows

British Empire People Are Fighters And Can Take It

Ottawa.—Navy Minister W. H. Hughes of Australia told the people of that Dominion in a broadcast "we are getting body blows, terrible but not deadly in the fighting in Greece. The broadcast was picked up at the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's listening post here.

The navy minister said the situation "is bad, but not as bad as the collapse of France" and added "we of the British Empire are a fighting race."

Captain Kennedy Honored

Memorial To Commander Of Rawalpindi Unveiled In London

London.—A memorial to the captain of the British auxiliary cruiser Rawalpindi, sunk by the German pocket battleship Deutschland in November, 1939, was unveiled in a public ceremony, the British Broadcasting Corporation reported. A. V. Alexander, first lord of the admiralty, performed the ceremony in honor of Capt. E. C. Kennedy, who went down with his ship after he engaged the German raider.

More Battleships

35,000-Ton Ship Prince Of Wales Is Now In Commission

London.—Britain's second new battleship, the 35,000-ton Prince of Wales, sister ship of the King George V, which took Viscount Halifax to the United States, is now in commission, the Press Association reported. Three other battleships were laid down with the King George V, and the Prince of Wales. They were named the Anson, Beatty and Jellicoe.

For Scrap Iron

Old Farm Machinery From Prairies To Be Utilized

Ottawa.—Rusty memorials of past progress on the prairies may soon be dragged from the farmyards where they have stood in disuse to be transformed into useful weapons of war.

Mr. Justice T. C. Davis, associate deputy minister of national war services, said that rural municipality associations in the west were being assisted by 6,600 elevator agents in making a complete check on supplies of scrap metal.

"The department wished to know as closely as possible what supplies were on hand because the prairie problem of metal salvage differed from that of the east due to the cost of transportation to foundries. At the rate the survey was going, Mr. Justice Davis said it was possible policy on shipments from the prairies would be discussed in two or three weeks.

S. E. Keller, Canadian National Railways general supplies manager, Winnipeg, has been loaned to the department for 60 days and is traveling through the prairies guiding the survey.

Authorities were confident the prairies would be a fruitful source of scrap metal because of developments in farm machinery during the past 30 or 40 years. They recalled that the large steam engines and early tractors used in farming operations had been supplanted by smaller, more efficient types; with the scrap metal market little in evidence, the old machinery was usually left on the farm, gradually being stripped of all metal parts for which the farmer could find a use. But the large foundation hulks remained.

In spite of the farmer's ability to make machinery work to the last, binders, plows, trucks and other equipment had to be replaced eventually and the junk-piles have gained in size with the years.

Even if the shipment of metal immediately is not economically sound, the salvage authorities said it would probably be needed in the future and it was important that they should know about quantity, varieties and nearest shipping point.

British Empire Medal

New Military And Civil Award For Meritorious Service

London.—Institution of a new military and civil award for meritorious service, the British Empire Medal, was announced in the London Gazette.

Statutes of the order of the British Empire are being altered to include the new award.

Subsequent services will be recognized by a bar or bars to the medal which will be worn after the Burma gallantry medal.

The award replaces the medal of the order for gallantry when the George Cross was instituted.

Norwegians Are Fined

Stockholm, Sweden.—The Norwegian towns of Stavanger and Haugesund and the Rogaland district of Norway were sentenced by the German-occupying forces to pay a fine of 500,000 kroner because of sabotage to telephone wires belonging to the Nazi war force. The inhabitants also were ordered to stand guard over German military works.

TRAINS WITH R.C.A.F.

Christopher Wigley, son of Sir Wilfred Wigley, governor of the Leeward Islands, British West Indies, has arrived in Montreal to join the R.C.A.F. as air crew. Formerly a manager of a sugar plantation, Wigley said he came to Canada instead of England because "I would probably have been sent over here sooner or later to train."

Treatment Of Prisoners

German War Prisoners In Canada Are Well Treated

London.—Richard Law, financial secretary to the war office, told the House of Commons that "there is no ground whatever" for the suggestion that German prisoners in Canada are receiving anything but good treatment.

"The Germans are in a camp previously occupied by Canadian officers and to which before that people paid to go for their holidays," he said in replying to a question which asked for information regarding conditions in two so-called reprisal camps in Poland.

The financial secretary also was asked whether the German government acknowledged now that no German officers have been ill-treated in Canada.

Mr. Law said conditions at the Polish camps, situated at Posen, are still not satisfactory.

"No communication has yet been received from the German government but representations have been made to the protecting power. We are fighting an unscrupulous foe and it is not in our power to bring any further direct pressure beyond what is being done at present."

Planned Housing

Buildings Erected For Wartime Housing Are Only Temporary

Ottawa.—All houses erected by the Wartime Housing Ltd. will be temporary structures, designed for liquidation after the war, Joseph M. Pigott, of Hamilton, told the Canadian Federation of Mayors and municipalities at the opening of its fourth annual conference.

"The importance of planned housing developments was stressed by Mayor Ray T. Forbes of Fredericton, N.B., in introducing Mr. Pigott, president of Wartime Housing, the government corporation set up to build houses to relieve wartime congestion.

"The company will build only where there is a definite and acute shortage of housing," said Mr. Pigott.

GAS MASK CHECK-UP IN LONDON

Regular checkups on gas masks are the order of the day in London. These office workers line up to pass through a gas chamber on a mobile gas van. British expect that Nazi planes may unleash gas bombs in a "prelude to attempted invasion."

Battle Of Atlantic Is The Most Critical Point Of Whole Front

Atlanta, Ga.—Although Hitler "has given his people a long run of victories," Viscount Halifax, British ambassador to the United States, said that "without that final victory against the British commonwealth all else will avail him nothing."

He added that Hitler therefore is straining every nerve "to cut the jugular vein of British resistance which is represented by merchant shipping; he will stop at nothing to achieve his purpose, and there is no doubt that this is at the present moment one of the principal, if not the greatest, danger points."

"But there is no reason to think that, if you can help us quickly enough, we shall not be able to checkmate his efforts," Lord Halifax said in a speech before the Atlanta Bar Association and broadcast over a nation-wide hookup.

"Quite apart from the large reinforcements we have received of foreign shipping, Norwegian Dutch, Danish and Greek, we have been able to make great developments of our shipbuilding resources, and the immense reserve of our own shipyards is coming into play."

The ambassador said that "in Greece we were well aware that we could not hope to bring a force to assist the brave Greeks that would in any way be of comparable strength with that which the Germans could bring against us."

"But this war is going to be one of endurance, and quite apart from all the natural impulse that weighed in favor of helping those who had so gallantly espoused the cause of freedom, there were sound military reasons for our intervention," he said.

Lord Halifax explained that Britain knew Hitler was anxious to avoid fighting in the Balkans in order not to break the flow of supplies from that area and that "the Allied forces have given up no ground without exacting from the Germans a price in losses, both human and material, on a scale that will not be without effect when they become known at home."

Of the German thrust at Egypt, he said it was now held at the frontier after the advance across Libya and that such a victory was empty for the Germans unless "it opens up further possibilities of destroying the armed forces of the enemy; for in this sort of warfare that is the only certain measure of success."

At a press conference, Lord Halifax expressed the hope that the United States would give Britain all the aid possible "as quickly as you possibly can do it" in the battle of the Atlantic.

"The battle of the Atlantic," he said, "is the most critical point on the whole front. Whatever you can do to help us, I hope you will do as quickly as you possibly can do it. Your own people are working hard to produce the needed goods and munitions. There's not much sense in producing if they are not delivered."

Asked what constituted practical help, Lord Halifax hesitated and then replied: "Time is gold. The value of that help will be immeasurably increased by the speed with which it is delivered."

He declined to discuss conveying of merchant ships by the United States navy.

Will Contribute

Crown Companies Making War Supplies Will Assist Local Improvements

Ottawa.—Crown companies set up to manufacture war supplies will contribute voluntarily to the cost of local improvements, schools and other municipal services, a spokesman for the munitions and supply department said.

Crown companies, being government property, are not subject to municipal taxes, but "it is obvious that if the government sets up a plant which will require municipal services, something should be paid for these services," the spokesman said.

"We cannot put a couple of thousands of workers in a town without paying their shot."

Appointment Of Gen. Blamey

London.—Lieut.-Gen. Sir Thomas Blamey, commander of Australian forces in the Middle East, was appointed second in command to Gen. Sir Archibald Wavell, head of the Middle Eastern Imperial army, in an obvious attempt to check Australian discontent over the conduct of the campaign in Greece.

Says War Supplies From United States Must Reach Britain

Washington.—Cordell Hull, United States secretary of state, declared emphatically that "ways must be found" to see that American-made war supplies reach Great Britain and the other nations resisting aggression "in the shortest of time and in maximum quantity." He proposed "no specific measures for guarding the vital sea lanes."

In an address to the American Society of International Law, Hull said:

"Events have shown beyond possible question that the safety of this hemisphere and of this country calls for resistance wherever resistance will be most effective."

"In my judgment, our safety and security require that, in accordance with the declared policy of the legislative and executive branches of the government, aid must be supplied without hesitation to Great Britain and those other countries that are resisting the sweep of the general conflagration."

"This policy means, in practical application, that such aid must reach its destination in the shortest of time in maximum quantity."

"So . . . ways must be found to do this."

The secretary, with a reputation for circumspection and evasion, spoke right from the shoulder on the general subject, "The United States and the World Situation."

He said there was a clear misconception in many sections in the United States of the nature of the war and what would happen if the Axis powers won, advising the American people "it is high time the remaining free countries should arm to the fullest extent and in the briefest time humanly possible, and act for their self-preservation."

It was a "short-sighted and exremely dangerous view," Hull said, for some Americans to argue that the United States need not resist until the western hemisphere is attacked and he pictured a situation where the Axis powers dominated and controlled four continents, leaving the Americas isolated.

"Yes," he exclaimed, "it makes a difference who wins—the difference whether we stand with our backs to the wall with all the other four continents against us and the high seas lost, alone defending the last free territories on earth—or whether we keep our place in an orderly world."

It was the British fleet, he declared, that is keeping the Germans from sweeping across the narrow English channel and "were the control of the seas by the resisting nations lost, the Atlantic would no longer be an obstacle—rather, it would become a broad highway for a conqueror moving westward. Our protection would be enormously lessened."

The secretary of state took to task those Americans who say it makes no difference which side wins or who say a British defeat would not matter to the United States or who suggest a negotiated peace at this time. He called on "130 millions of Americans to rise in our might and proceed as one man in the herculean task of equipping this nation to the fullest for its self defence."

Warning that "time is pressing" and "the struggle may continue for a long time," Hull declared his absolute faith in the ultimate triumph of freedom, justice and security.

He cautioned Americans at the same time against becoming too easily discouraged by news that is "temporarily unfavorable" and said the United States owes its place in history to the fact that "the people become more resolute and determined as danger and difficulty increase."

Some women fall for pity as easily as others do for flattery.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

SPRINGTIME brings a revival of hope in this time of crisis, when the forces of evil appear at times overwhelming. Despite the devastating effects of war on human life and property, the earth takes on its new Spring garb; people plant seeds in their gardens, farmers plough and seed and life in general takes on a freshened hue. The early morning freshness is invigorating to mind and body, and even tardy risers are urged to get out earlier than has been their accustomed wont. The twittering of birds calling to each other—the robins, the meadowlarks and the bluebirds—seem to be calling you to get up even earlier than the bugle sounding the call of "Reveille" on the barracks square. No matter how man's normal routine may be disturbed by war's disruptions, Nature pursues its inexorable round, reminding us that our efforts are small indeed compared to the mighty forces over which we have no control.

ATTENTION has been called to the ease with which German prisoners of war travelled west to Medicine Hat following their escape from an internment camp on the north shore of Lake Superior. People driving automobiles are in most cases generous in giving lifts to hitch-hikers, without enquiring if they are law-breakers, aliens or thieves. The fact that the two captured at Medicine Hat had no registration cards emphasizes the importance of carrying these, and to take care they do not fall into the possession of strangers.

AT BLAIRMORE last evening the 16th annual musical festival of the Crows Nest Pass concluded. Color was given to it this year by the playing of the R.C.A.F. band from Macleod. Unstinted credit is due to the committee which throughout the years has kept this festival to a high standard, and has promoted the study of music and singing among the cosmopolitan people of the group of mining towns whose population consists almost entirely of people whose daily work does not tend to make them keenly interested in matters musical. Yet some of their most brilliant students and competitors are the children of miners and a very large percentage whose parents are of foreign birth. It is such work as this which helps them to become a credit to themselves and to develop a love for the land of their adoption. Another noteworthy point in connection with this festival is that throughout its sixteen years it has financed itself without having to ask for heavy grants, except for very small grants from local municipal bodies. Other towns of greater opportunities have tried to conduct musical festivals and have failed for lack of local support.

FROM this corner of southwestern Alberta many people travel to Lethbridge. From Crows Nest, to west of Coleman, the highway is gravelled. Then for nine miles east it is surfaced; from Bellevue to Pincher station it is gravelled, and from there to Macleod it is surfaced. As soon as you hit the east end of Macleod's main street, you become enveloped in a cloud of dust from the gravelled highway which increases in discomfort till you reach Monarch. It has been intimated that this portion will be surfaced this spring or summer. It is a well known fact that unless you agitate for improvements, you don't get them. The wheel that squeaks loudest gets most grease. That's why persistent effort should be made to press for the early completion of surfacing, not only from Macleod to Monarch, but from Pincher Station to Bellevue, and from Coleman west to Crows Nest. Here's the province and the Dominion spending thousands of dollars in publicity in the United States to attract tourists, who when they learn of the dusty highway on this southern route, shoot off at Cranbrook and go over the Windermere highway north. Besides, this highway is used for twelve months of the year; heavy revenue is derived from licenses and gasoline tax. For years people have suffered discomfort and it is high time that this entire highway from Lethbridge to Crows Nest be given attention—not at some indefinite time—but NOW—so that southwestern Alberta people may enjoy some pleasure in driving on the highway which they are paying heavily to maintain.

WINSTON CHURCHILL is very human. In The Legionary, official magazine of The Canadian Legion, is the following interesting comment by Mr. Churchill on Smoking:

If we look back on our past life, we shall see that one of its most usual experiences is that we are often helped by our mistakes and injured by our most sagacious decisions.

I suppose if I had to re-live my life I ought to eschew the habit of smoking. Look at all the money I have wasted on tobacco. Think of it all invested and mounting up on compound interest year after year. I remember my father in his most sparkling mood, his eye gleaming through the haze of his cigarette, saying, "Why begin? If you want to have an eye that is true, and a hand that does not quiver; if you want never to ask yourself a question as you ride at a fence, don't smoke."

I remember Lord Roberts, the dapper and famous Field Marshall, in 1902 stopping me as I walked down St. James' Street puffing a large cigar, echoing the same advice. "Don't smoke," he said. "It is so easy not to incur the habit. I am sure your father injured his health by over-smoking. Give it up now and live long in full vigour and activity. Let me give you this piece of advice as an old man." Of course, I ought to have taken it. Of course, I ought to put that down as one of the things to do if I lived my life over again.

But consider! How can I tell that the soothing influences of tobacco upon my nervous system may not have enabled me to comport myself with calm and with courtesy in some awkward personal encounter or negotiation, or carried me serenely through some critical hours of anxious waiting? How can I tell that my temper would have been as sweet or my companionship as agreeable if I had adjoined from my youth the goddess of Nicotine? Now I think of it, if I had not turned back to get that matchbox which I left behind in my dugout in Flanders, might I not just have walked into that shell which pitched so harmlessly a hundred yards ahead? (Here I will pause, unrepentant, to light another cigar).

Coast Pigeons Race New Route

Scenes like the above soon will be enacted on Canadian Pacific Railway station platforms at Agassiz, Hope, Princeton, Pentticon, Beaverdale, Nelson, Cranbrook, Coleman and Lethbridge for the North Road Racing Pigeon club of Vancouver will be releasing birds at these points during the season May 4-Sept. 7. Formerly the club released them at points in Oregon and Washington for distance flights back to Vancouver, but the war has now prevented shipments into the U.S. and the club will use the southern B.C.

Alberta route. Above photo shows Belfast-born George Smith, race expert of the North Road club, releasing pigeons in a demonstration for Canadian Pacific Express agents who will be releasing the birds from the southern B.C. and Alberta points for the scheduled races later in the season.

Coleman One of Points From Which Birds Will Fly

War has laid its heavy hand on the ancient and peaceful sport of pigeon racing.

Vancouver's North Road Racing Pigeon club, active in sponsoring distance races for its members' birds, has abandoned its former practice of expressing birds to Washington and Oregon centres for release and, starting May 4, opens a season featuring races from Agassiz, Hope, Princeton, Pentticon, Beaverdale, Nelson and Cranbrook, B.C., and from Coleman and Lethbridge, in Alberta back to Vancouver.

Reasons not unconnected with rulings of the Foreign Exchange control board prompted the change, but the 41 active members of the North Road club, including practically all of Vancouver's best known and most experienced pigeon handlers, welcome the change of route.

Like New Route

Officials and agents of the Canadian Pacific Express Company are cooperating fully with the North Road club to make the new route the success its sponsors predict for it.

On the longer distances such as from Nelson, Cranbrook, Coleman, and Lethbridge, to Vancouver, birds will be tested to the full since it will entail high altitude flight all the way. Furthermore, prevailing winds are westerly and there will be few occasions when birds will be able to wing their way back to the coast with the wind which is such a great boon to aircraft pilots.

Express agents at the various releasing points are being fully educated in the business of opening the shipping crates in the proper way which gives them all an even start. The complicated business of timing the flight of the birds to their home lofts in Vancouver, all of them at variable distances from the releasing point, is handled by club secretary W. F. Meal and Timer George X. Smith.

For "old birds"—experienced racers which have proved their mettle over distances up to 700 miles—the club has lined up the following races: May 4, Agassiz to Vancouver; May 11 and 18, Hope to Vancouver; May 25 to June 1, Princeton to Vancouver; June 8, Pentticon; June 15, Beaverdale; June 22, Nelson; June 29, Cranbrook; July 5, Coleman; and July 12, Lethbridge. Except in the case of Coleman and Lethbridge the birds will be released on Sunday, making their way back to Vancouver on the same day.

Young Bird Races Too

Because of the extra distance to the Alberta cities, release will be made on Saturday and the owners will be waiting in their lofts in Vancouver Sunday for their far-flying pets.

Races for young birds also have been lined up but Nelson, an open race on September 7—is the farthest point from which the juniors will be required to wing. Other young birds events will be staged from Agassiz, July 12, Hope, July 19 and 26; Princeton, August 2 and 9; Pentticon, August 16 (two events); and Beaverdale, August 30.

The North Shore club which is now pioneering a new racing route through B.C. for their feathered gamesters represents an interesting collection of Old Country sportsmen—Lancashire lads, Yorkshire lads, Tynesiders from Newcastle, Scots from the Clyde and canny Belfast Irishmen. They would rather race pigeons than eat, and many will be the side bets posted, along with the prize money during this summer's big season over the new southern B.C. route.

WORLD HAPPENINGS BRIEFLY TOLD

United States military air observer, Col. Gerald Brower, has been killed in Egypt. He died in a plane accident.

Two hundred leading New York diamond merchants pledge themselves to raise $50,000 for British war relief.

Ten million Chinese are threatened with famine conditions in eastern and northern Kwangtung province as a result of the Chinese-Japanese war.

Conscription of Canadian manpower is "desirable and imperative," said a resolution passed at the annual meeting of Ottawa branch of the Canadian Legion.

Col. Sir Laurence Rolleston, who when he resigned from a scouting appointment last year, was considered the oldest Boy Scout in the world, is dead in London at the age of 93. Air Commodore G. O. Johnson and N. R. Anderson of the Royal Canadian Air Force arrived in Britain for a survey of recent developments in the Royal Air Force operational methods.

The Petain government announced that France has withdrawn from the League of Nations under the provision which gives any member the right to withdraw after two-year notification.

May Prove Important

Syria Is Considered Strategic Point If Turkey Enters War

Syria is at present well out of the war zone, but should Turkey become involved the French mandate would have considerable strategic importance, since it is bounded on the north by Turkey, on the south by British-controlled Palestine, and on the east by Mesopotamia, another British possession with rich oil deposits, points out a writer in the New York Sun. The French army in Syria, which was brought to a high state of efficiency under General Maxime Weygand, is not believed to be very large to-day, but in the difficult terrain even a small army would have great defensive power.

Syria has been regarded, since the beginning of history, as a meeting place of the East and the West. Its great inland bazaars, of which Damascus and Antioch were the most renowned, brought together caravans from Persia, Arabia and India and traders from the Phoenician ports of Tyre, Sidon and Beirut. The population is mostly Arabic, but there are many Turks, and, in the coast towns, large numbers of Greeks. The natives on the whole are tractable, but there is one group, the Druses, numbering about 50,000, who are fierce warriors and who only ten years ago were in open revolt against the French.

Even the Druses, however, are mild compared with members of the cult of Assassins who ruled Persia and Syria for almost 200 years, from near the end of the eleventh century until they themselves were overthrown and massacred in 1255. They were hashish eaters (hence the word assassin) whose religion taught that enemies should be secretly murdered.

Over 3,000 Attended Classes In Scotland During Last Year

Apart from anti-aircraft units, which are provided for separately, over 3,000 soldiers were attending classes in Scotland alone at the end of last year. A number are studying languages, including Arabic. But German, French, and Italian, in that order, are the most popular with the students, who expect to be able to make use of them later. Girl soldiers are not being neglected, and cooking, typing, dressmaking and beauty culture are among courses open reports the News of the World.

Reaches Home In America

Schoolboy On Bicycle Escaped From Antwerp Ahead Of Nazis

A 17-year-old Dutch schoolboy who fled by bicycle from Antwerp, Belgium, into France only a few miles ahead of the German army, arrived recently on Pan American's Dixie's Clipper to join his parents in California.

The youth, Hans De Gorter, told of bicycling for six days, four of them virtually without food, and covering nearly 1,000 miles, in the course of which he was machine-gunned three times by German war planes. Once he was wounded, a bullet striking a finger.

The boy's parents left their Amsterdam home before the invasion to go to Los Angeles, where the father, Jacques, is in the fur business. Hans remained in Antwerp to finish his studies.

His bicycle trip began May 19, "when the Antwerp police told everyone in town between 17 and 35 to leave the city." On the way to Paris he was forced to make many detours because of military events.

Afterward he spent eight months near the occupied area borderline, trying to get a visa.

Tribute To Englishmen

Harold J. Laski, the English writer on economic and political subjects, tells of hearing a Rumanian diplomat in London say to a Czech statesman that it must be a proud thing to be a Yugoslav. "I confess," writes Mr. Laski, "to some emotion when I heard the Czech reply: 'Almost as proud as to be an Englishman.'"

Promise Means Nothing

Nazi Assurance To Turkey Should Be Warning Enough

The Rome government radio has broadcast a report "from well-informed sources" to the effect that Ambassador Franz von Papen has assured Turkish Foreign Minister Saracoglu that "Germany has no intention of attacking Turkey."

That is the tip-off, says the Buffalo Courier-Express. Germany "had no intention of attacking" Norway and Denmark. Germany had "no intention of attacking" Belgium and Holland. Germany had "no intention of attacking" Yugoslavia and Greece. Now Turkey gets the same sweet promise.

The Turks can't say that the Germans didn't warn them.

Royal Medals For New York Detectives Who Were Killed

Viscount Halifax, British ambassador, expressed the "profound respect" of the King and Queen for the courage of two New York City detectives killed last July 4 when a time bomb exploded in the British pavilion at the New York World's Fair. In removing the bomb to a vacant lot they averted even greater disaster, he said in presenting Distinguished Service Medals posthumously to Detectives Ferdinand A. Socha and Joseph J. Lynch in ceremonies at city hall.

Guesses Were All Wrong

So Goering Has Lost Position As Adviser To Hitler

Authentic news reports confirm the scattered rumors that relations between Hitler and Goering have been cooling for several months. The coolness began last fall Goering apparently assured Hitler that the Luftwaffe would have no trouble getting and keeping control of the air over England, and he personally, amid much fanfare, took charge of the attack.

When the Luftwaffe failed, Hitler blamed Goering. His belief in Goering's judgment, already shaken, hasn't been bolstered by Italy's collapse. Goering was one of the earliest and strongest advocates of bringing Italy into the war, insisting that it would bring victory in the Mediterranean. The result has been that Goering has been pushed into the background as an adviser, with Hitler relying more and more on others in the High Command.—News Week.

Gypsy Woman Proudly Declined Money From Spanish King

While walking near San Sebastian some years ago King Alfonso of Spain offered a gold coin to a gypsy woman who accented him, reports the News of the World. This she declined proudly. "King," she said, "keep your money. My race is older than yours. I will give you a piece of gold." The gypsy then placed in the monarch's hand a coin bearing the effigy of Tshag, the last King of the Almoravids, who died in 1147.

WHEN DEATH WON THE RACE

In the above photo-diagram, fourth in the series designed to reduce the toll of crossing accidents, is shown what happened when a speeding train struck a truck loaded with human beings, to kill 23 of them instantly and to injure several others. Had the driver paused to stop, look and listen when he approached the crossing this could not have happened. Motorists are urged to consider the appalling fact that in 1940 Canada had 346 crossing accidents, with 133 deaths and 485 persons seriously injured. More than half these accidents occurred in broad daylight, and 68 happened at crossing protected by safety devices.

THE CHURCH ENLARGING ITS FELLOWSHIP

Golden text: They therefore that were scattered abroad went about preaching the word. Acts 8:4.

Lesson: Acts 8. Devotional reading: Isaiah 42:1-8.

Explanations and Comments

The Scattered Christians Preach Wherever They Go, Acts 8:4-8. The attempt to extinguish a great fire by kicking the embers apart resulted in a new fire where each ember fell. Hitherto the apostles had done the preaching. At the time of the appointment of the seven, deacons the apostles had declared, "We will give ourselves continually to the ministry of the word." Now all believers scattered by persecution went everywhere preaching the word. As they sought shelter in the villages and towns, they would explain why they were there and tell the story of the gospel. This brought latent talent to the surface, and those gifted began more formal preaching.

The Church Enlarges Its Fellowship, Acts 8:14-17. Looking at it today, there seems nothing very noteworthy in the fact that Philip went and preached the gospel to the city of Samaria, but as some of those early Christians looked at it, it was not only a very bold and adventurous thing to do but a quite presumptuous and risky thing. The gospel as they then thought of it was a gospel for the Jews, not for Samaritans. The bitter feeling between Jews and Samaritans reached back to the time when the Jews on their return from Babylon refused to allow the Samaritans to help in the rebuilding of the temple on the ground that the latter had intermarried with the heathen tribes in Palestine and were perverts from Judaism. Philip's work among the Samaritans had to be investigated by the church at Jerusalem. Peter and John were sent on this mission. With extraordinary broad-mindedness the two apostles gave their approval to the work, and the people had been baptized and the apostles prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Spirit, as they laid their hands upon them. On their return to Jerusalem they themselves preached in many Samaritan villages.

Health LEAGUE presents TOPICS OF CANADA VITAL INTEREST

SOURCES OF VITAMIN C

The old scourge of seamen, scurvy, and explorers, namely scurvy, which was caused by lack of fresh fruits, vegetables and fresh food generally and for which lime-juice (really lemon-juice) was a specific, is now readily prevented by the use of either cabbage or strawberries.

Of strawberries from three to five ounces (say 30 berries) or about 1 to 4 ounces of cabbage daily will suffice to prevent scurvy. Many other foods, such as for example as spinach, turnips or potatoes do equally well.

On his first great voyage of discovery Captain Cook, the celebrated navigator, insisted that his sailors should use soups made from wild celery and other plants. He set the example by eating wild celery himself and those of his crew who demurred were given the tops of the plants.

The saving agent in fresh foods, fruits and vegetables is ascorbic acid. Both strawberries and cabbage are amply supplied with this acid. The berries have from 36 to 65 milligrams (one-one thousandth of a gram) of ascorbic acid in each 100 grams of the fruit (a gram is a little over 15 grains). In cabbage the proportion runs from 48 to 181 milligrams to the 100 grams.

A common way in which to provide vitamin C for children is to give them a daily allowance of orange juice, or other fruit juices and tomato juice. All these juices deteriorate on standing exposed to the air, so they should be freshly prepared. This is particularly true of tomato juice.

Gardening

Probably the best garden soil for vegetables, flowers, grass, and most shrubs, is a good loam. This is a soil that is not all clay or all sand. It is really a mixture of both, plus a lot of humus, or rotted vegetable material like leaf matter. Of course, one does not find this ideal soil everywhere but it is possible to create it out of almost anything in Canada.

Heavy Soil

Heavy soil, for instance, can be loosened permanently by the spading or plowing in of some well-rotted strawy manure or lacking this vegetable growth such as clover, quickly grown oats or even weeds. In very small gardens it is possible to secure a soil that is not so heavy and free from leaf mould. This will also help to loosen the heavy clay and make it easily worked. Just plain cultivation alone will help. The beginner with a brand new piece of raw clay soil is always hardest to work at first. Each year will find the job simpler, the soil improved.

Sandy Soil

Light sandy soils are always greatly benefited by the addition of strawy manure or black loam. The incorporation of vegetable matter such as straw and weeds or clover will add humus to the sand and make it hold moisture better and give it a more desirable body.

Take Your Time

Because we have long hours of sunlight in spring and summer, it really does not matter then if our garden goes in late, as once growth starts it is rapid. Garden beginners are advised to have patience. There is no need for rushing, in fact there are very good reasons against such a course.

Real growth with most vegetables does not get underway until the weather and soil begin to warm. There are some exceptions, of course. Lettuce, spinach, peas, nursery stock, should be planted as soon as possible as all like cool weather.

But for the medium hardy type of vegetable—things like beans, beets, corn and tomatoes—there is no advantage in sowing too soon. They will make little growth in any case until the soil really turns warm.

DAUGHTER OF DESTINY

— BY —

CHAPTER IV.

That moment Wong announced dinner—and relieve for Devona. The sudden stir of voices, the movement across the long drawing room to the big, cool dining room beyond gave her time to marshal her emotions. It was so ridiculous—being upset like this just because a man she'd met less than 12 hours before smiled at some other woman.

Still she couldn't smother the little hope that at least she would be placed next to Dale at the table.

ward Vara to catch some half-whispered remark. If Dale were in love with Vara—

Dinner finally dragged to an end and dancing was begun on the long verandah overlooking the garden.

"At the end of the first number Talbot released her, stood looking down at her as if for the first time. 'I knew you'd dance well,' he said abruptly.

"Did you? How?"

"Because you walk well. Gracefully. Few American women do. It's important, I think."

The music began again, and Talbot took her back into his arms. "You've had an unusual education, haven't you?"

"I've been exposed to education in some strange places, if that's what you mean," she smiled. "Swiss convents, French boarding schools, English tutors and a father who thought a trip to Victoria Falls or a summer's trek through German cathedrals more important than a college degree."

"And wasn't it?"

Dale, with Vara in his arms, danced past her shoulder. Maybe if she'd grown up to the more conventional sophistication of her mother's bright world it might have been different. "Sometimes—I wonder."

And when the dreamy waltz ended, Talbot looked at her, suddenly very serious. "How long are you staying here?"

Devona started. "Why—I don't know. Indefinitely, perhaps. This is to be my home."

Talbot shook his head. "I'm not sure you should. I'm afraid all this may spoil you." His shrug included the crowded room, the shrill clatter of women's voices, the clink of thin-stemmed glasses. "You're rather perfect, you know, just as you are."

Devona flushed warmly, tried to read between the lines of his scowl. Just what did he mean? A child, was she, not grown up enough to be interesting to her mother's worldly friends? Was this Talbot's way of telling her she wasn't wanted here?

In the middle of that thought,

A cool little smile hid her inner fury. "I'll risk that. And now, if you'll excuse me—"

He bowed. "Certainly."

Then, deliberately, head very high, the cool little smile still in place, she crossed the room to where Dale stood talking to Vara.

"I want to be danced with, Dale," she dared and held out her hands to him. "You've talked to Vara long enough."

Vara covered surprise with a little smile. "Yes, dance with the child, Dale. And come talk to me about that other later."

"Child!" Devona echoed as Dale slipped his arm around her. "Do I look so terribly half-grown?"

"You look like a very stunning young woman," Dale smiled, his blue eyes warm.

The music stopped, and they stood watching the moon lay a shimmering mantle on the patio fountain.

"It's stuffy in here," she began calmly. "Let's go out."

Dale kept one slim hand in his as they strolled across the shadow-patterned lawn to the big pool.

"Gorgeous night, isn't it?" she said when the silence became unmanageable.

"Yes—gorgeous," but he was looking at her. "What are you like behind that pretty smile?" he asked, half serious, half joking.

"Just a sweet 16-year-old who's never been kissed," she mocked with just a shade of bitterness.

"If you aren't just that, you're a swell imitation."

His arm slipped around her waist, she tried desperately to match Dale's cool indifference.

She didn't see Dale again until it was time to say good night. Most of the other guests had gone to their rooms, but Devona had lingered, hoping for a word, a gesture, some sign that Dale was just a little interested.

But his blue eyes were masked when he said, "Good night, Devona."

Long after she'd slipped into the great oaken bed she lay wide-eyed, staring into the darkness. "Dale," she whispered, and the sound sent waves of trembling washing over her.

His eyes, his deep voice, his smile—like warm refuge from the coolness of Vara's welcome.

He must care a little—his eyes had said so. And yet—something was strangely wrong. As if his caring were against his will. That cold "good night" like a door closed firmly in her face.

What was this sinister something that made blind allies of her every thought, her every hope? Formless, nameless, yet omnipresent, it stalked her like some very real ghost. Talbot, George Barnard, Vara and Dale himself hinting, warning, drawing curtains over some strange reason for her leaving this—her only home. What did it mean? What could it mean?

Praises Spitfire Planes

Member Of American Eagle Squadron Says They Are Beauties

Byron Fees Kennerly, flight commander of the American Eagle Squadron of the R.A.F., is home on furlough.

The tanned, 32-year-old Spitfire pilot, who was a building contractor at Pasadena, Cal., before he left for England to join the R.A.F., scoffed at rumors of a shortage of British planes.

England is covered with R.A.F. fighter planes, and her supply of excellent U.S. and British bombers is rapidly growing," he declared.

The leading American in the R.A.F., Kennerly has had several hundred hours in the air at the controls of the speedy, eight machine-gun Spitfires. He says they handle like "little beauties."

He told of the ground crew's worship of the Spitfires and their young pilots.

"The eight men who comprise the ground crew of each plane will fight at the drop of a hat if anyone says anything against their plane or its pilot."

The crew puts little patches over each gun's mouth to cut the wind resistance. If the patches are gone when the plane returns, the crew cheers. The men know the plane got a crack at a Jerry."

When R.A.F. pilots are shot down, Kennerly said, they have special guns with incendiary bullets which they fire to demolish their own planes. Radio sets are destroyed by T.N.T. before a British plane lands on enemy territory.

Nazi pilots, according to Kennerly, apparently believe that a large part of the British Isles has already been captured by Hitler's troops.

He recalled how one young German aviator, after his ship had been shot down over an English countryside, hurried to a farmhouse and asked the way to the nearest German airbase.

The Eagle Squadron commander, who received a furlough after he injured both ears in a 500-mile-an-hour-plus power dive, is relaxing in southern California.

Continue To Fight

Cannot Be Any Patched-Up Peace After This War

A patched-up peace after this war is useless, "we must continue to fight until the curse of Nazism can be eradicated," Sir Robert Clive, British diplomat, said in an address at Montreal.

Speaking under auspices of the National Council of Education, Sir Robert said the German people must be made to understand they cannot dominate the world. "It is inconceivable that Hitler can ever succeed where Napoleon failed."

Sir Robert discussed the League of Nations and predicted that a new League would arise after the war "better and wiser for the failure of the last one."

New Rocket Engine

An engineer recently invented a rocket engine which he claims when used in conjunction with conventional power, will increase the bomb load of a plane 85 per cent, and decrease take-off distance one-third.

There are more bones in the skull of an infant than there are in the skull of an adult.

The most useless thing on earth is an airplane.

Quick Action Necessary

More Than Wishful Thinking Is Needed To Shorten War

Even if the British are ultimately driven from the mainland, Herr Hitler still has not won his war and will know that he has not won it. The same is even more true of the advances in Cyrenaica; though they constitute a prestige victory of importance and a harassing embarrassment to other British efforts in the eastern Mediterranean, they cannot have decisive value unless they begin to threaten Egypt.

One cannot say the same for the tonnage figures in the Atlantic; unfortunately, unless that curve can be checked and turned downward, the peril will begin to be acute. We know that this war can be won, given time and energy; there is nothing yet even to prove that the Balkan campaign, whatever its miseries for the peoples on the ground and whatever the outcome, will not yield a return commensurate with its costs. But its swift course is another reminder that this war, and the world with it, can be lost unless more than words and wish-thinking are flung into the balance against the tanks and bombs with which the new tyranny advances.—New York Herald Tribune.

For The Navy

Women Of Canada Have Knitted Comforts Forwarded By The Red Cross

Since the outbreak of war the Canadian Red Cross Society has been continuously distributing, necessary and very welcome comforts—socks, sweaters, scarves, helmets, mitts, underwear, wind-breakers—to the men of the Navy and Merchant Marine, both of Canada and of Great Britain.

Up to the end of February a total of 164,871 articles had been supplied to men in the Canadian Navy. In addition to this, 34,907 similar gifts were made to the men of the Canadian Merchant Marine, bringing the total to 199,778 articles distributed in Canada.

Emergency gifts to the Navy League in Great Britain, for the use of men of the British Navy, totalled 84,717 for the same period and, further, 128,388 comforts were distributed among nine other seamen's organizations of Great Britain.

This means that, from the yarn and materials purchased by the Canadian Red Cross Society and given out to its numerous branches, the women of Canada have provided 412,883 articles for these men of the seas.

TRIM SPRING SLIP COVER

Fit By Pinning Fabric to Chair

That faded Cinderella of your chairs may become a queen overnight. For to-day you can pin on colorful spring slip-cover material—and tomorrow you can baste and finish.

It's as simple as that to make such a smart slip cover as we've pictured—and smart it is, in beige crash and coral fringe, with seams finished in coral wetting.

Following the pin-on method you needn't be "handy." First remove the chair cushion and smooth your fabric over the inside-back and seat, leaving a 4-inch tuck-in between.

For welted seams, work with fabric wrong side out. Then you pin every 3 inches and cut off surplus material outside the pins, allowing 1½ inches for seams.

In the very same way, fit the arms, sides, back and cushion. Now pin together all seams and baste, inserting the wetting from the right side.

This half completes your slip cover! All that remains is to stitch it up and add the fringe.

Our 32-page booklet gives exact details, step-by-step diagrams for making slip covers for differently shaped chairs and sofas, also auto seats. Tells how to trim, make pleated flounces.

A Home Guard Story

Brigadier Found The Personnel Had War Experience

Major-General J. H. Beith, in an address on "The Army of To-day" at the Royal Empire Society, told the following story: Not long ago a brigadier happened to pass a Home Guard sentry post in London. He recognized the sentry—his own solicitor—who turned out the guard. They were all elderly, and most of them were a good many service ribbons. He asked one man, "What were you before you joined the Home Guard?" "A rear-admiral, Sir." He passed to the next. "And what were you?" "A major-general, Sir." He moved some what hurriedly to the third man. "You are wearing some decorations that I don't seem to recognize at all. Foreign, I suppose?" "I was an ambassador, Sir." After that the brigadier dismissed the guard.—London Times.

British fliers say that snow falling on fighter planes may add nearly 200 pounds to the load, and on a large bomber 1,000 pounds may be added.

Dale, with Vara in his arms, danced past Devona's shoulder. And as he did so again, that strange feeling came into Devona's heart. What hold did Vara have on Dale's affection? She asked herself

"Dale, darling, take me in please," Vara, one hand gracefully high against the window frame, stood so that the heavy maroon velvet drape made starting background for her white gown.

"Sure," Dale smiled and slipped her arm through his.

Devona felt her heart plummet. "Tal, you'll take care of Devona, won't you, angel?" Vara smiled carelessly toward them.

Tal nodded. Then, to Devona, he said, "Looks like you're stuck," as he guided her toward the dining room. "And I'm rotten company these days, too."

"Don't be silly," Devona insisted politely and wished that they weren't seated at the opposite end of the table from Vara and Dale at an angle from which Devona couldn't help seeing how beautiful her mother was. And how obviously devoted Dale was.

Jerking back her jealousy, she turned to Tal and smiled encouragingly. "Tell me about your play."

"I wrote it just for her," his dark eyes burned feverishly. "If she can't put it over, nobody can."

"She will, I'm sure," Devona encouraged him. "After all, it must be good or she wouldn't have chosen to act in it."

And suddenly she really hoped it was good—terribly good. Enough to succeed. It would have to succeed if this strangely violent young brother of Dale's was to keep his sanity. Anybody could see that.

Devona found herself searching Dale's face hungrily as he leaned to George Barnard tapped Tal's shoulder.

"Having a good time?" Barnard slipped an arm around her waist.

He danced well, with a smooth, old-fashioned precision. Devona, following easily, smiled up at him. "Lovely. Does mother—Vara, I mean—have parties like this often?"

"Every night," Barnard grinned wryly. "Even when she's doing six evening and two matinee performances a week. None of us can see how she keeps it up."

Devona glanced toward Vara's laughing face. "Maybe because she's happy."

"Happy? Vara?" Barnard shook his head. "She'll never be happy."

"Why?"

"Ambition, I guess." Then, abruptly, his smile disappeared behind a frown. "How long do you plan to stay here?"

Startled, Devona stared at him. "You're the second person this evening who has asked me that."

"Because this is no place for you."

"But why not?" Anxiously, she searched his face, as fears stalked into her mind, took possession.

"You don't even belong to this generation—much less a gang like this."

So that was it. That was probably what Talbot had meant, too. That she was just one out of the Victorian era with about as much glamor as cambric tea. Her chin nodded higher. "How do you know I don't belong?"

Barnard smiled indulgently. As if, she thought, suddenly angry, she was a little granddaughter begging to stay up past her bedtime.

"You're sweet, honest, unspoiled. That's why."

"And that makes me unbecome?"

"No—unsafe,"—dryly.

Rev. A. A. Lytle Gave Lantern Slide Lecture on Monday Evening at United Church

Monday evening Rev. A. A. Lytle, M. A., secretary of the southern Alberta branch of the British and Foreign Bible Society with offices at Calgary, visited Coleman and gave a very interesting lantern slide lecture on the topic, "Between the Crosses," at St. Paul's United church, to an interested group from different churches of town. In a brief statement about the work of the Bible Society in Europe, he said a great number of bibles and portions of scriptures were being sold than in the previous year, and that all their branches were being kept open, even in Germany, though the branch was obliged to move from Berlin to another city. In Alberta alone he stated that to the present over 11,000 special new testaments have been issued to soldiers, sailors and airmen who wished them.

Theatre Notes

The wonder picture of all time, "The Thief of Bagdad," will come to the Palace at the week-end. In it you see a mountainous genie towering into the very clouds—magic horses that fly over great cities—a magic carpet that wings around the world in a twinkling—all the glories of the thousand and one nights. It is filmed in magic technicolor.

At Cole's Theatre, Bellevue, at the week-end come two of the screen's brightest stars, Errol Flynn and Olivia De Havilland in "Santa Fe Trail." Also included in the cast is Canada's own Raymond Massey fresh from his successful portrayal of Abraham Lincoln. "Santa Fe Trail" portrays a history in the making with its accompanying dangers and thrills.

Special program has been prepared for Thursday and Friday at the Palace, May 1 and 2. The main feature is "The Ramparts We Watch." This is the first of the March of Time series. In this picture America again faces the problems she faced in 1917. Will she again decide to go to war? Included in the picture are the famous German pictures which Hitler has used so often to scare and bully small nations into capitulating without bloodshed.

Along with "The Ramparts We Watch" will be another film, "Typhoon" filmed in technicolor.

LIONS WILL MEET AT MANY GLACIERS HOTEL

The district convention of this organization will meet on June 18-20-21 at the above famous hotel resort. The district includes clubs in Alberta and Montana, and Browning Lions Club extends a cordial invitation to all members. Special provisions as to passports and exchange are being arranged.

BID FOR ENLARGEMENT OF CANAL APPROVED

The Henry J. Kaiser Company announced that its bid of $22,436,860 for enlargement of the Panama Canal had been accepted by Canal authorities.

The work, which calls for excavation for a third set of locks on the Pacific side of the canal, will start in 30 days, the company said. The new set of locks will augment the Miraflores and Pedro Miguel locks.

The bid calls for excavation of 30,000,000 cubic yards of dirt, use of 2,000,000 yards of concrete aggregate, construction of five miles of highways and relocation of three miles of railroad.

The work is to be completed in 1,200 days.

WHITE-WASHING HINTS

White-wash is cheap, readily available, sanitary and easy to apply. It protects the surface and brightens up dark interiors.

The surface to be white-washed should be free from dirt, dust, grease and scaly material. A stiff brush may be used to clean the surface. Just before the white-wash is applied, the surface should be slightly dampened. White-wash is easy to apply with a brush, but a sprayer may be used, as a wide brush, working rapidly, and do not attempt to "brush out" white-wash as is done with paint. Under ordinary conditions, one gallon of white-wash will cover approximately 225 square feet of wood, 180 square feet of brick and 270 square feet of plaster.
